On April 1, 2014, charges were filed against the Swedish government and three of its agencies to the nation's Chancellor of Justice for widespread and systematic violations of the much heralded "public principle" ("offentlighetsprincipen" similar to FOI). The violations occurred when the government failed to respond to over 4,000 citizen requests for information related to the ubiquitous spraying of aerosols over the country from aircrafts (a k a "chemtrailing") that has been going on for several years.

Sweden's "dirty half-dozen": Prime Minister Fredrik Reinfeldt, Minister of Defence Karin Enström, Minister for the Environment Lena Ek, Environmental Protection Agency Director

General Maria Agren, Commander in Chief Sverker Göransson, and Director General for the Swedish Meteorological and Hydrological Institute Lena Häll Eriksson.

Given the scale and systematic nature of the violations, as well as the number of victims (over 1,034 as of April 1, 2014), damages of 100,000 SEK (ca. 15,000 USD) per instance have been claimed. Since the number of known instances of failure to uphold the “public principle” is over 4,000, the Swedish government may face up to half a billion SEK (ca. 60 million USD) in total claims.

FILING OF CHARGES WITH CLAIMS AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT (MINISTRY OF THE ENVIRONMENT), ARMED FORCES, ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AGENCY AND THE SWEDISH METEOROLOGICAL AND HYDROLOGICAL INSTITUTE FOR VIOLATIONS OF I.A. THE “PUBLIC PRINCIPLE”

Starting on February 11, 2014 – i.e. seven weeks or 49 days ago – the Government (Ministry of the Environment), the Armed Forces, the Environmental Protection Agency, and the Swedish Meteorological and Hydrological Institute and other government agencies have been approached with a demand for answers and action plans concerning the threat to human health as well as the entire ecosystem posed by the aerosol spraying of the sky over Sweden that occur on a daily basis.

The only official body that acted in accordance with the “public principle” and actually responded to the request was Sweden’s Civil Aviation Authority.

We therefore now file charges against the Government, the Armed Forces, the Environmental Protection Agency and the Swedish Meteorological and Hydrological Institute for violations against the “public principle”.

The charges include a claim for each agency for 100,000 SEK for each person, i.e. a total of 400 000 for undersigned.

The ongoing aerosol spraying over Sweden could hardly take place without Government consent and knowledge of aforementioned agencies and we reserve the right to further damages claims against these, as well as other so far unidentified entities, when the extent and coverup of the spraying has been confirmed.

Sincerely,

The original request (2014-02-11):

Dear elected official, civil servant, The one contemporary societal issue that perhaps best epitomizes the Danish writer Hans Christian Andersen's fairy tale "The Emperor's New Clothes" is the stunningly massive aerosol spraying program government agencies and elected officials in Sweden quietly allow to continue to happen and which the media simply refuses to touch.

Given the many alarming reports about what chemicals the aerosols are actually made up of, as well as the harmful effects they have on humans and the ecosystem it is now time for an immediate halt to the spraying, followed by a public and intellectually honest discussion where all the facts are presented to the public.

Your response, including a proposal for action-plan is expected within three weeks.
